K-Drama Tears Induced By Spicy Food

by Cherie Britton

K-pop has been all the rage for the past decade, captivating audiences worldwide. I've seen a few K-dramas myself (little secret: IU is my favorite K-pop artist) and have heard whispers of bibimbap and kimchi here and there. So, when the opportunity arose to try K-Pocha in Byron Center, the daring foodie in me couldn't resist diving in headfirst.

Pocha, a delightful Korean term, refers to the charming outdoor food and drink stalls that bring life to the bustling streets. Derived from the word "pojangmacha," meaning covered wagon in Korean (a term I've frequently encountered in K-dramas), these stalls are culinary havens serving up a plethora of delectable street food and beverages. Pochas are renowned for their vibrant energy, inviting ambiance, and tantalizing food offerings.

Did I mention that Korean food tends to be spicy? It's like they sprinkle chili peppers on everything, even the dessert! Okay, maybe not the dessert, but you get my point. From fiery kimchi to tongue-tingling bulgogi, Korean cuisine is not for the faint of heart – or taste buds. For those brave souls who can handle the heat, it's a flavor explosion unlike any other. Just make sure you have an order of bingsu on standby because you'll probably need it. When in doubt, just slurp up some noodles and sweat out those spice-induced tears (no K-drama here, sniff!).

Bingsu is a delectable shaved milk dessert that is elegantly layered with a plethora of toppings. A mountain of finely shaved milk serves as the canvas, providing a light and airy base. It is then lavishly adorned with an array of sweet toppings and drizzled with sweetened condensed milk. Each spoonful presents a delightful medley of fluffy snow, luscious toppings, and bursts of sweetness. It was supposed to be a flavor explosion in my mouth, but alas, my taste buds were left wanting because they were out of bingsu when I visited. My taste buds were in for a wild ride when I realized I had nothing to neutralize the heat on that fiery chicken, all because they were out of bingsu.

Let's talk about how subjective taste can be. What may set my taste buds on fire could be a walk in the park for you. So, don't let one review deter you from trying out K-Pocha. Who knows, it could be exactly what you're looking for! Embrace the heat, challenge your palate, and dive headfirst into that fiery cuisine. Remember, it's all about finding what suits your own personal spice tolerance. So go ahead, give it a try and see for yourself if this joint is the perfect level of heat for you. Meokja (Let's eat!)

AVOCADO EGG SALAD

Enjoyed best when shared.

Ingredients:

- 3 large hardboiled eggs
- 1 large avocado, pitted, peeled and chopped
- 2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
- 2 tablespoons plain Greek yogurt, or mayonnaise
- 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard, or yellow mustard
- 3 green onions, white and light green parts only, chopped
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh chives
- 1 teaspoon chopped fresh dill, optional
- salt and black pepper, to taste

Procedure:

1. Place the chopped avocado in a medium mixing bowl. Add the lemon juice and gently toss with the avocado.
2. Chop the peeled eggs and add them to the mixing bowl. Add the plain Greek yogurt (or mayonnaise), Dijon mustard, green onion, chives and dill (if using). Stir and season to taste with salt and pepper.
3. Serve avocado egg salad in a sandwich or wrap, on toasted bread, in lettuce wraps, or as desired.

BINGO

THE ITALIAN ROOTS (1530S)
IT ALL STARTED WITH A POPULAR LOTTERY KNOWN AS "IL GIOCO DEL LOTTO D'ITALIA," WHICH WAS A WEEKLY TRADITION FOR MANY ITALIANS.

BINGO MAKES ITS WAY TO FRANCE (1770S)
RENAMED "LE LOTTO" BY THE FRENCH, THIS GAME OF CHANCE BECAME A FAVORITE PASTIME AMONG THE ELITE. ARISTOCRATS GATHERED AROUND TABLES WITH CARDS WITH THREE ROWS AND NINE COLUMNS, EACH FILLED WITH A TANTALIZING SET OF 10 NUMBERS.

BUT HERE'S THE KICKER - INSTEAD OF FANCY MARKERS OR CHIPS, PLAYERS IN FRANCE USED GOOD OLD BEANS TO COVER THEIR NUMBERS. YES, YOU HEARD THAT RIGHT! BEANS WERE THE OG BINGO MARKERS BACK IN THE DAY.
